

NPR Biased News Reporting

NPR news reporting is harming Israel and Jews by broadcasting distorted, unbalanced, and often inaccurate reports on the Middle East conflict. The coverage is overwhelmingly sympathetic to the Arab Palestinian “cause” and hostile to Israel, and it does not provide the public with a fair and honest understanding of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

NPR omits important historical, political, religious, and moral context, focusing primarily on the grievances of the Palestinians, while censoring Arab hate education and incitement to kill Jews and Americans by religious and political leaders. NPR is downplaying or completely ignoring Israel’s vulnerability and suffering. While Israel has, in fact, shown great military restraint and integrity in fighting this terrorist war against its men, women and children, NPR regularly misrepresents Israeli actions.

NPR frequently avoids personalizing Israeli victims of terror, while giving extensive coverage to human-interest stories about Palestinians including homicide bombers. NPR also gives lopsided prominence to critics of Israel, frequently omitting the views of the mainstream. Due to NPR’s large (upwards of 20 million) and influential listener base, the damage is incalculable. Details of some of these abuses, and NPR’s refusal to correct them, have been well documented (see www.camera.org and www.fixnpr.org).

NPR is funded both directly and indirectly (via 600+ affiliate stations) by taxpayer dollars. The Corporation for Public Broadcasting (CPB), which funnels tax dollars to NPR and the affiliates, is mandated by the 1967 Public Broadcasting Act to dispense funds to networks that provide “strict adherence to objectivity and balance in all programs or series of programs of a controversial nature.”

Eighty percent of the NPR budget comes in the form of donations from individuals, business sponsorship, and foundation grants.

Individuals, businesses, and foundations that support the right of Israel to exist should withhold their financial support until NPR begins to cover Israel fairly and accurately.

- We must encourage our Congressional representatives to request an independent investigation into the use of tax dollars to support a biased NPR agenda.
- We must stop donating private monies until NPR changes its dishonest reporting.
- We must stop the public broadcasting of lies.
